

ADEA Regional Faculty Development Workshops April 24–25, 2014

Bringing IPE Home

Overview

Whether your institution is already engaged in interprofessional exercises or looking for that first step to bring interprofessional education (IPE) to your institution, fully understanding IPE in the context of national changes to health care delivery models is essential to your institution's success. IPE is the pedagogical approach used to educate health professionals and their students to better understand the roles, responsibilities and professional tenets of their own, and other, health professions, in an effort to remove barriers to teamwork and ultimately result in more effective and improved health outcomes. Health care delivery models are being transformed at a rapid pace to align with collaborative care. This is why it is critical that our dental school faculty become "IPEducated" and ensure that their students are well prepared for success after they graduate.

Learning Objectives

Participants who complete this workshop will be able to:

- Understand changing national trends in health care delivery models and their impact on dental education and practice.
- Facilitate simple IPE exercises at their home institutions.
- Apply best practices for introducing and assessing IPE programs at their home institutions.
